Teacher standardisation reference

TEACHER REFERENCE · KEEP SEPARATE FROM THE EXERCISE
Reference commentary for selected extracts. Marks belong to the complete synthetic presentation, not the extract alone.

LIR-P-01 · Human-rights protection

Extract A

The Court of Appeal did not decide that all facial recognition is unlawful. It held that discretion over deployment locations and watch-list categories was too wide, and the equality duty was inadequate. The Human Rights Act made a domestic remedy available, while Strasbourg supervision remains a separate route. The case demonstrates a concrete correction, but one claimant cannot prove consistent protection for every deployment.

Associated complete profile	P01-S
Complete-profile mark	86/100 · A*
Reference commentary	Accurate applied law, domestic/international distinction, explicit remedy and limitation; tightly causal excerpt. Delivery remains unobserved.

This extract supports discussion of the stated evidence. It does not, by itself, establish the complete holistic mark or evidence actual delivery, timing, pronunciation, questioning or authenticity.

Extract B

The Supreme Court in Ziegler recognised that peaceful protest can engage Articles 10 and 11. It did not create a general right to block roads. A court considers purpose, duration, disruption and circumstances. This protects dissent, although proportionality can be difficult to predict. The later 2022 Act changed the context, but I have not examined its detailed sections.

Reference commentary	Correct holding and counterargument but the 2022 law and evidence are under-developed; coherent but partial.

This extract supports discussion of the stated evidence. It does not, by itself, establish the complete holistic mark or evidence actual delivery, timing, pronunciation, questioning or authenticity.

Extract C

The Human Rights Act brings European rights into UK law. Article 5 is liberty and Article 6 is fair trial. The Belmarsh case was about detention, although my title says fair trial. The European Court checks countries, and courts can protect people when government uses strong powers.

Complete-profile mark	47/100 · D
Reference commentary	Article 5/6 mismatch and vague institution comparison leave the question unresolved; basic structure only.

This extract supports discussion of the stated evidence. It does not, by itself, establish the complete holistic mark or evidence actual delivery, timing, pronunciation, questioning or authenticity.

LIR-P-02 · Global governance/shared challenge

Extract A

UNAMSIL's mandate was a Security Council decision under the Charter, not a free-standing power to govern Sierra Leone. Reports show disarmament, electoral assistance and institutional support, but activities are not automatically effects. Liberal mechanisms are coordination and monitoring; realist mechanisms are credible force, troop contributions and host-state consent.

Complete-profile mark	84/100 · A*
Reference commentary	Mandate, activity/effect distinction and both IR theories are applied to evidence; strong excerpt only.

This extract supports discussion of the stated evidence. It does not, by itself, establish the complete holistic mark or evidence actual delivery, timing, pronunciation, questioning or authenticity.

Extract B

UNICEF situation reports describe temporary learning centres, WASH and child-protection referrals. These are activities rather than proof of learning quality or durable progression. The CRC supports protection and education, but UNICEF could not compel Bangladesh to choose a curriculum or settle the wider political issue. Coordination helped immediate access, while sovereignty, funding and donor priorities limited durability.

Complete-profile mark	62/100 · B
Reference commentary	Good institution, legal basis and limitation; independent outcome evidence and causal mechanism are thin.

This extract supports discussion of the stated evidence. It does not, by itself, establish the complete holistic mark or evidence actual delivery, timing, pronunciation, questioning or authenticity.

Extract C

COVAX was a partnership to share vaccines. The WHO Constitution and health regulations show that WHO works on health, but it cannot force countries to donate. COVAX delivered many doses, but rich countries bought vaccines first. It was partly effective, although I do not have exact figures or an independent comparison.

Complete-profile mark	45/100 · D
Reference commentary	Real intervention and theories but no precise evidence, legal application or mechanism connecting delivery to inequality.

This extract supports discussion of the stated evidence. It does not, by itself, establish the complete holistic mark or evidence actual delivery, timing, pronunciation, questioning or authenticity.

LIR-P-03 · Hard and soft power

Extract A

If influence means immediate access at one maritime site, hard power produced the clearer short-term effect. If it means accepted and durable regional alignment, the soft-power case is stronger. The PCA award gives a legal legitimacy test, while enrolment or cultural reach only shows opportunity for influence. China's great-power status makes both tools consequential and makes neighbours alert to hierarchy.

Complete-profile mark	88/100 · A*
Reference commentary	Operational definitions, legal legitimacy, consistent criteria and conditional great-power judgement; delivery unobserved.

This extract supports discussion of the stated evidence. It does not, by itself, establish the complete holistic mark or evidence actual delivery, timing, pronunciation, questioning or authenticity.

Extract B

The BBC World Service used Dari and Pashto broadcasting to provide news and a UK-linked public service. Its audience was Afghan and international listeners. Reach proves communication, not acceptance of British policy. Military power could support a security operation quickly, but coalition outcomes depended on local legitimacy. Soft power had a wider but less measurable audience.

Complete-profile mark	64/100 · B
Reference commentary	Distinct audience/objective and sensible evidence caution; legal application and depth are limited.

This extract supports discussion of the stated evidence. It does not, by itself, establish the complete holistic mark or evidence actual delivery, timing, pronunciation, questioning or authenticity.

Extract C

Hard power is force and soft power is culture. India uses the army and yoga, films and food. Yoga Day is a UN example. People like soft power, so it is better, but hard power is important too. India is an emerging or great power because it is large.
