Discuss selected extracts against the current rubric. Record evidence and a provisional judgement; do not infer a complete-presentation mark from an extract alone.

LIR-P-01 · Human-rights protection

Extract A

The Court of Appeal did not decide that all facial recognition is unlawful. It held that discretion over deployment locations and watch-list categories was too wide, and the equality duty was inadequate. The Human Rights Act made a domestic remedy available, while Strasbourg supervision remains a separate route. The case demonstrates a concrete correction, but one claimant cannot prove consistent protection for every deployment.

Extract B

The Supreme Court in Ziegler recognised that peaceful protest can engage Articles 10 and 11. It did not create a general right to block roads. A court considers purpose, duration, disruption and circumstances. This protects dissent, although proportionality can be difficult to predict. The later 2022 Act changed the context, but I have not examined its detailed sections.

Extract C

The Human Rights Act brings European rights into UK law. Article 5 is liberty and Article 6 is fair trial. The Belmarsh case was about detention, although my title says fair trial. The European Court checks countries, and courts can protect people when government uses strong powers.

LIR-P-02 · Global governance/shared challenge

Extract A

UNAMSIL's mandate was a Security Council decision under the Charter, not a free-standing power to govern Sierra Leone. Reports show disarmament, electoral assistance and institutional support, but activities are not automatically effects. Liberal mechanisms are coordination and monitoring; realist mechanisms are credible force, troop contributions and host-state consent.

UNICEF situation reports describe temporary learning centres, WASH and child-protection referrals. These are activities rather than proof of learning quality or durable progression. The CRC supports protection and education, but UNICEF could not compel Bangladesh to choose a curriculum or settle the wider political issue. Coordination helped immediate access, while sovereignty, funding and donor priorities limited durability.

COVAX was a partnership to share vaccines. The WHO Constitution and health regulations show that WHO works on health, but it cannot force countries to donate. COVAX delivered many doses, but rich countries bought vaccines first. It was partly effective, although I do not have exact figures or an independent comparison.

LIR-P-03 · Hard and soft power

Extract A

If influence means immediate access at one maritime site, hard power produced the clearer short-term effect. If it means accepted and durable regional alignment, the soft-power case is stronger. The PCA award gives a legal legitimacy test, while enrolment or cultural reach only shows opportunity for influence. China's great-power status makes both tools consequential and makes neighbours alert to hierarchy.

The BBC World Service used Dari and Pashto broadcasting to provide news and a UK-linked public service. Its audience was Afghan and international listeners. Reach proves communication, not acceptance of British policy. Military power could support a security operation quickly, but coalition outcomes depended on local legitimacy. Soft power had a wider but less measurable audience.

Extract C

Hard power is force and soft power is culture. India uses the army and yoga, films and food. Yoga Day is a UN example. People like soft power, so it is better, but hard power is important too. India is an emerging or great power because it is large.
